4	Sierra Negra Volcano - Chico Volcano	B/BL/-
---	--------------------------------------	--------

Breakfast. The Sierra Negra Volcano is considered the oldest of the Isabela volcanoes. According to some geologists, including Nordlie, the wider and less deep a boiler is, the older it is. This conclusion is reached through a theory and observations that indicate that the volcanic processes in a caldera tend to tear down its edge, filling it. This activity is characterized by tremors and eruptions that are occurring over the course of thousands and millions of years. The youngest volcano is Cerro Azul, followed by Wolf, Fernandina, Darwin, Alcedo and Sierra Negra. This area is extremely active, having recorded three volcanic events in the 90s: two in Fernandina (91 and 95) and one in Cerro Azul (September 1998). The Sierra Negra caldera is 10 km in diameter and is the second largest in the world. Chico Volcano is located northeast of the Sierra Negra Volcano at an altitude of approximately 860msnm. There is a pedestrian path and a path for horse riding, which are clearly signposted.

Chico Volcano is a fissure of some parasitic cones, composed of slag and lava, is located northwest of the caldera, so it is not affected by the garua that always precipitates in the southeastern sector of the high islands.
